The site is located in Magdalena Mountains near South Baldy Peak, approximately 30 miles from Socorro, NM. Below is a description of the work involved:

Finish UT2 floor assembly: 1-2 days. Will require lifting the telescope enclosure and setting on some stands to allow for work underneath the enclosure. Enclosure and lifting frame weigh about 42,000 lbs. See picture below of the enclosure sitting on the stands.

Move UT2 to array: 1-2 days. Will require lifting fully assembled UT and mounting on a transporter to move to the array. The distance needed to travel is about 1,400 ft partially down a 10% grade. The UT will then need to be set on a concrete pad on the array. The fully assembled UT weighs about 76,000 lbs. The UT also needs to be kept level while moving to the array. For the first Unit Telescope a Faymonville Powermax was used to transport it to the array. The jig used to assemble the enclosure was used to mount the Unit Telescope on the transporter. See pictures below for the previous transport setup and of the route.

In total we would need the crane for 4 days and the transporter for 2 days. Included are two drawings: INT-403-DWG-0100 REV0.4_Integration has notes on the mass of each component and 100-00-00 UTE-UTM INTEGRATION has dimensions for the enclosure/jig.
