Tenure-Track Faculty Position
Mineral Engineering Department
New Mexico Institute of Mining & Technology (New Mexico Tech)

The Department of Mineral Engineering is seeking outstanding candidates for a full-time tenure-track position in the area of Mining Engineering with a strong focus on Rock Mechanics and Geomechanics, to start immediately. The position will remain open until it is filled. The position is available at the Assistant or Associate Professor level, depending on qualifications and experience in the following required responsibilities. Responsibilities of the successful candidate will include exceptional classroom teaching, advising undergraduate and graduate students, development of a vigorous externally funded research program, and active participation in campus-related and professional service. The applicant must possess an Engineering doctoral degree in Mining Engineering, or a closely related field.

Applicants must have excellent research and communication skills and must be able and willing to teach courses such as rock mechanics, underground excavation, rock slope stability. The candidate will be expected to teach general engineering courses from time to time. Preference will be given to candidates with a strong background in experimental research to complement advanced theoretical research in the department. Research interests in areas of applied Geomechanics, experimental rock mechanics, numerical and computer applications are highly desirable. Close contact with the mining industry is a plus.

Applications should include a cover letter summarizing education and experience, a separate statement of teaching and research interests, a complete vita, and a list of three to five references.
